STORY OF PMA

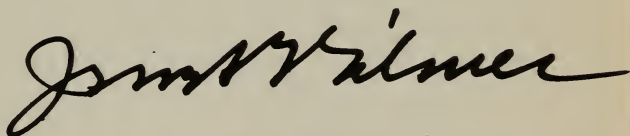

Co-Workers:

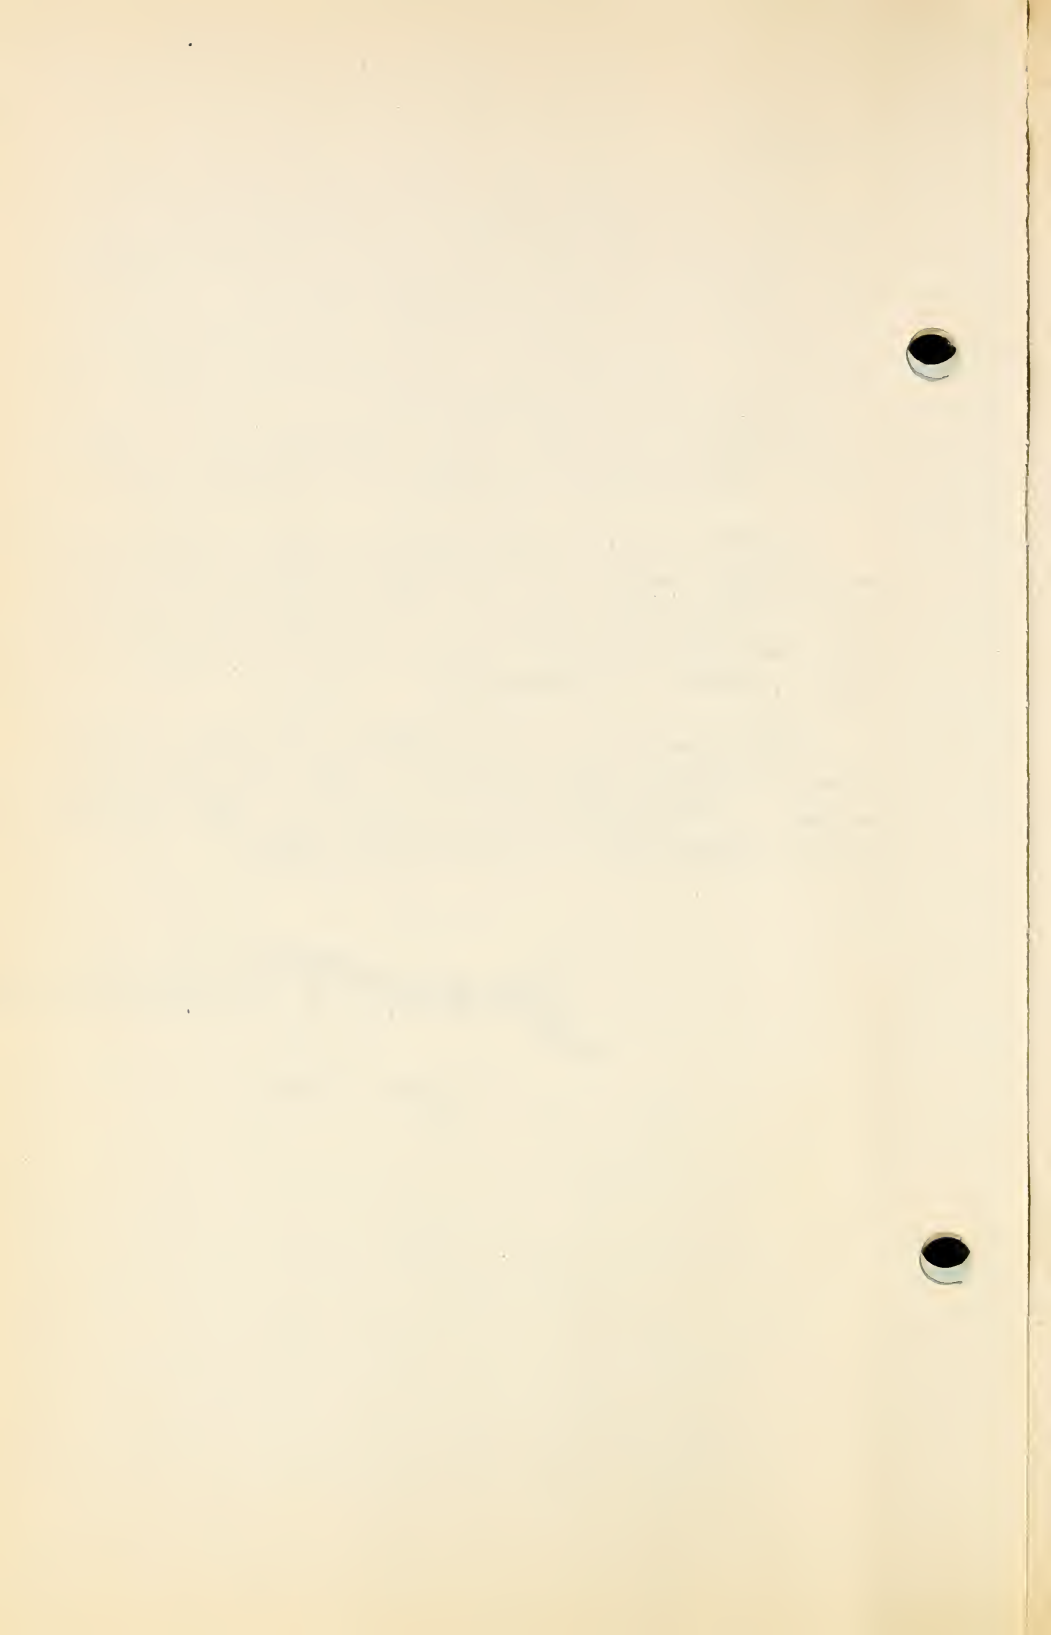

The brief statement that follows cannot adequately describe the scope and significance of our organization. Since the establishment of PMA in 1945, you who are administering, supervising, and planning its operations, have gone far in welding its various component parts into a single administration. It is not necessary to discuss the fine cooperation you have extended and that must continue if we are going to be successful in the job to which the Department is dedicated -- the service of agriculture for the public welfare.

The Department's objective of an adequate supply of agricultural commodities at equitable prices to the farmer and the consumer is centered in our organization. PMA is concerned with the production, marketing, price-support and supply problems of the Department.

PMA is organized to meet our part of the current national and world agricultural problems. As these problems change, we must stand ready to adjust our thinking -- and, if need be, our organization -- to these new situations.

PMA'S PEOPLE

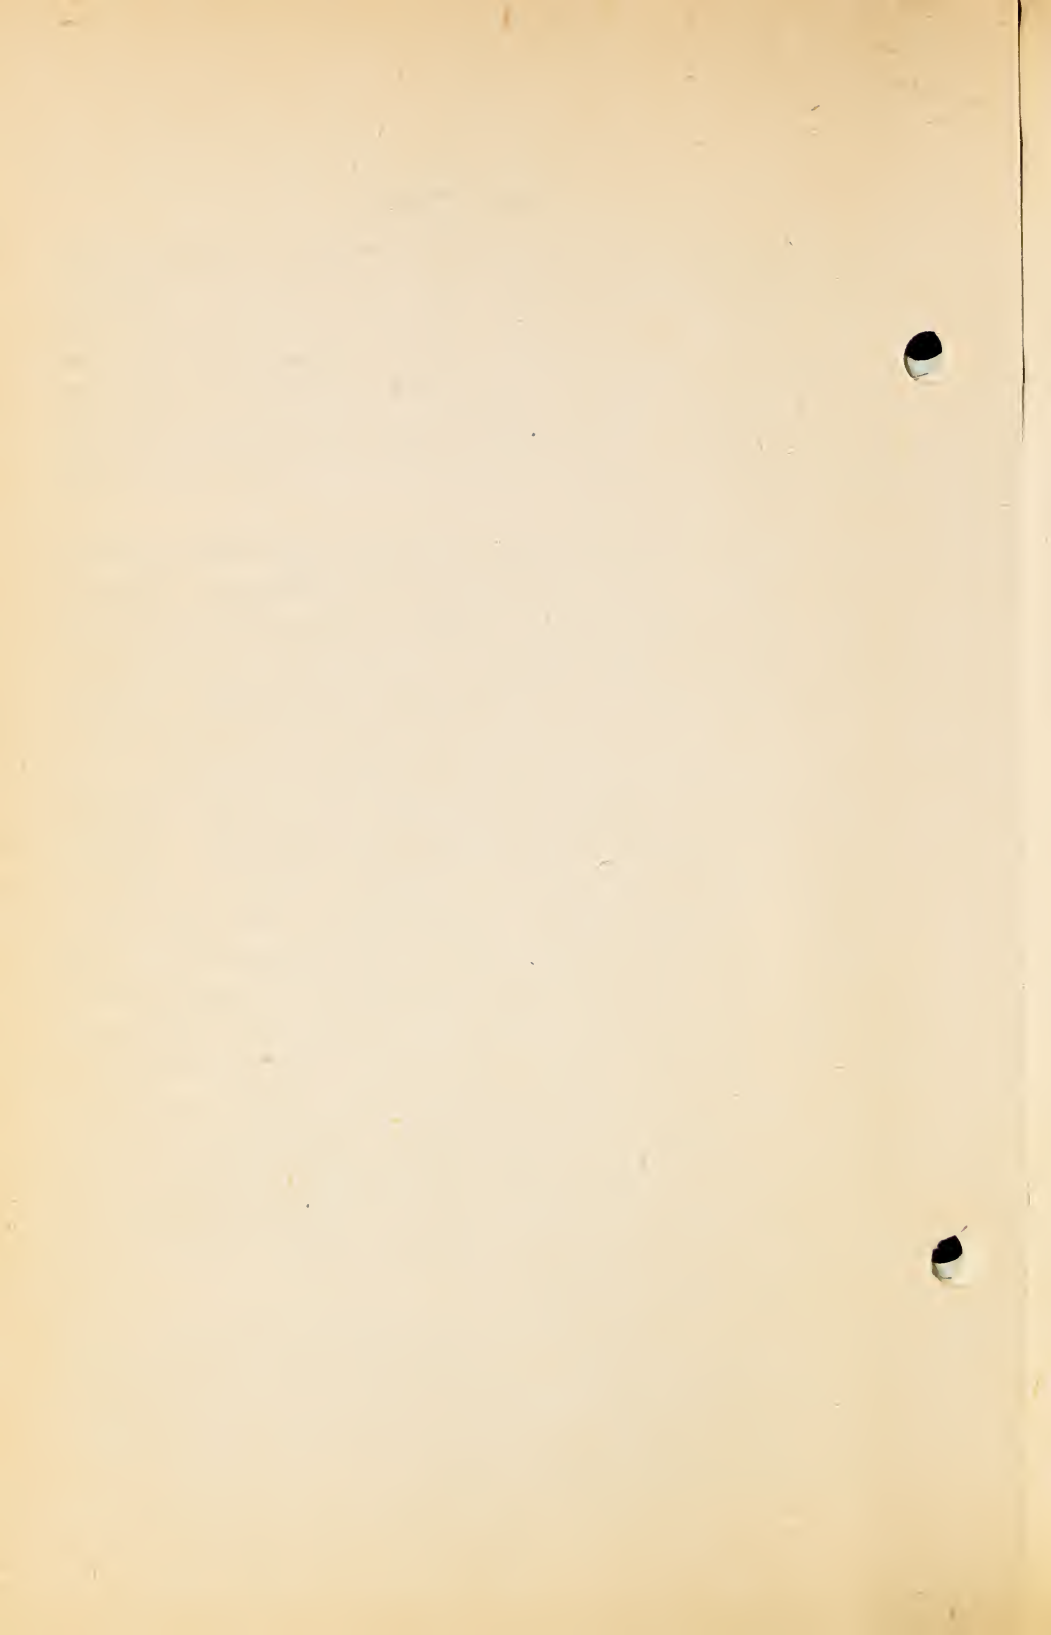

We have 10,000 regular employees and several thousand others who work seasonally and part time. These permanent employees are located in 475 different towns in the United States and occupy 850 separate office locations. Augmenting their work and working shoulder to shoulder with PMA are the 100,000 elected farmers working on agriculture conservation programs, and countless others working for State and local governments and private industries.

The technical and professional staff has been drawn together over a number of years from agricultural industries, research laboratories, agricultural colleges, experiment stations and other related fields of work. A significant percentage of the technical and professional staff has acquired training on the job to qualify them for their professional positions.

The regular workers of PMA come from every section of the country and from every occupation. As one would expect, those with an agricultural background predominate. Occupational groups represented -- over 300 in number -- include laborers, pharmacologists, technologists, wool appraisers, tobacco inspectors, cotton classers, meat graders, marketing specialists, chemists, plant pathologists, entomologists, clerks, stenographers, typists, accountants, auditors, claims examiners, agriculturists and bacteriologists.

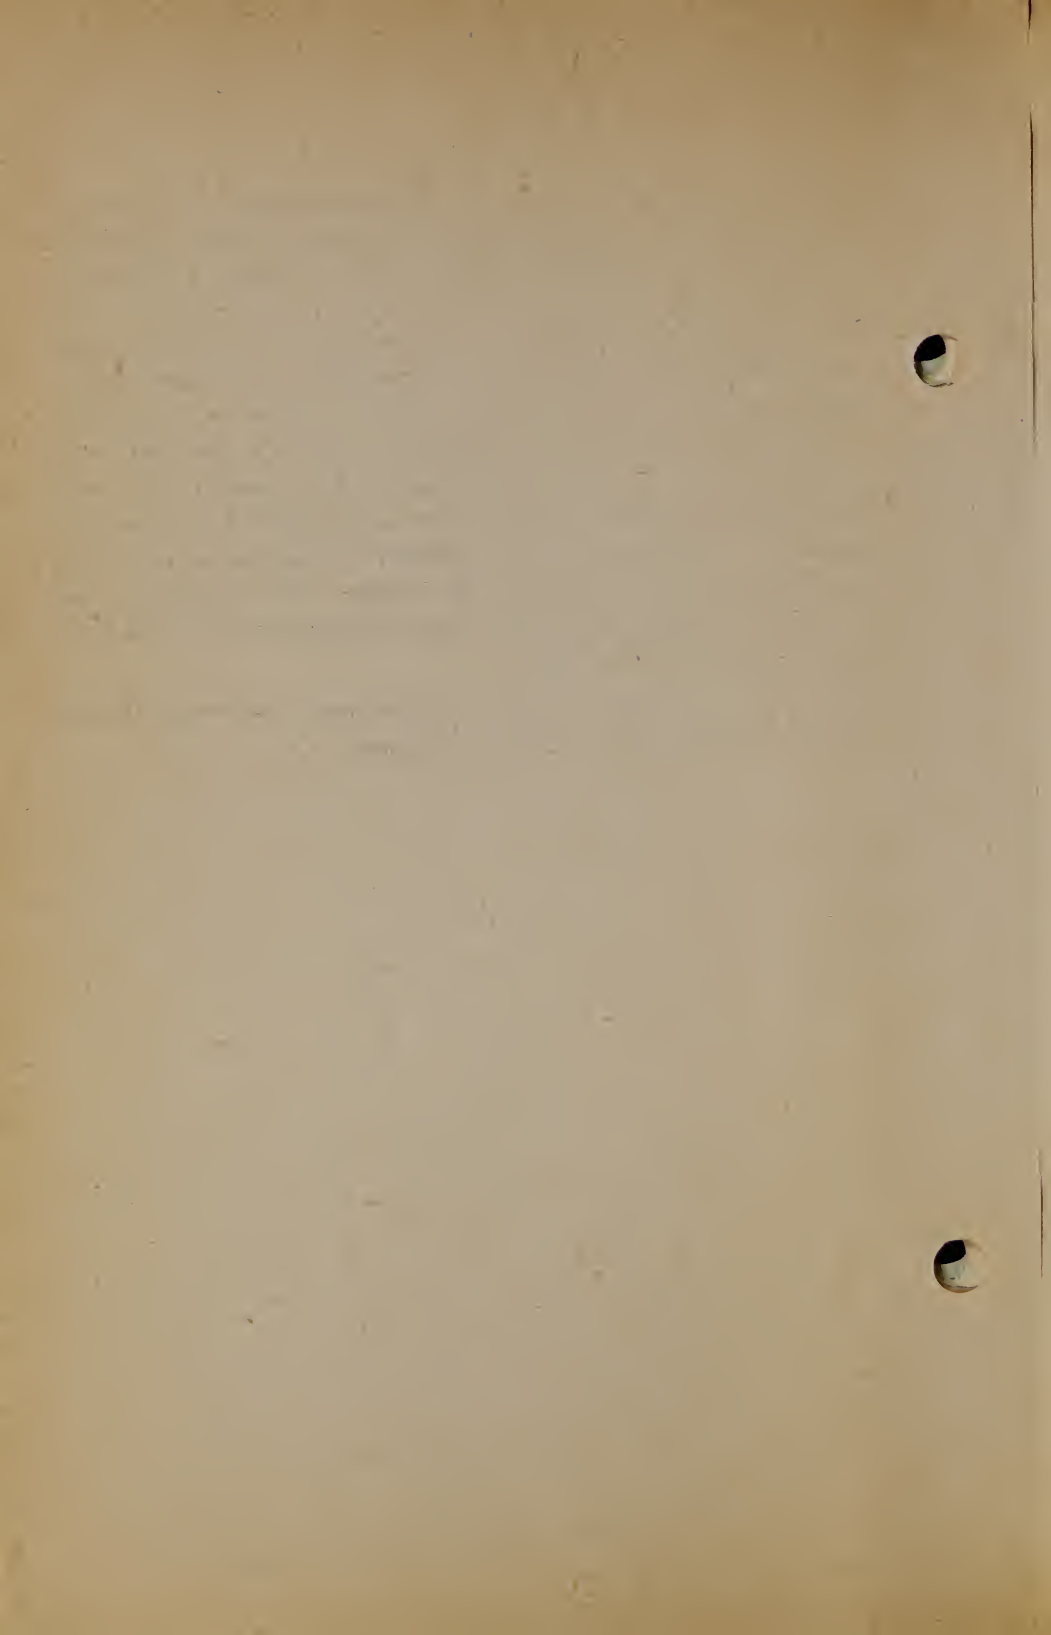

It is estimated that over 75 percent of the present personnel have been in PMA or the Department of Agriculture for more than five years. Approximately 35 percent have been in the Department for over 10 years. Out of every 100 employees in PMA, 60 are men, 98 have Civil Service status, 73 are in the field, and 30 are veterans.

The total job of PMA cannot be measured by the work of the 10,000 regular employees. It is supplemented by the thousands of seasonal employees who assist in cotton classing activities, tobacco grading and inspection, and the dozens of programs which require seasonal help.

the many community and county committeemen are elected to their positions by fellow farmers because of their knowledge of agriculture and their positions in the community. They are therefore particularly suited to carry on the work of their local agricultural conservation associations. Another part of the PMA job is done through cooperative arrangements with State, county and local people. These include employees in thousands of local banks, who participate in the loan programs on wheat, corn, cotton and other commodities, and employees of commercial banks who are involved in purchase programs. Similarly a large number of employees of State governments work as inspectors, graders, seed analysts, and at other specialized jobs under standards or technical supervision set up by PMA.

The following table shows, by Branches, where the 10,000 regular employees of PMA are assigned:

ITS BUDGET

PMA is financed through a number of separate appropriations, authorizations, and allotments from other agencies, departments, and foreign governments. The budget for this fiscal year consists of more than forty separate appropriations and transfers of funds. The appropriations range from $40,000 for the administration of the Naval Stores Act to $228,000,000 for the Agricultural Conservation and Land Use programs. In addition, the Commodity Credit Corporation is authorized to borrow up to $4,750,000,000 for financing its various loan, price-support and supply programs.

The sources of PMA funds are listed at the end of this section. Several of these funds were set up prior to the first World War, a number were initiated during World War I, another group came into existence during the depression years, and still another group of the appropriations and transfers have arisen out of World War II and current post-war problems.

The funds available under these appropriations and transfers are not interchangeable. Each allotment of money is made available for a specific purpose or program, and each must be accounted for separately. Thus we frequently find that although sufficient funds may be available for one purpose, the funds available under another appropriation may be insufficient to carry out fully the purpose for which they are authorized. This budget complexity frequently complicates our procedures and explains the unusual reporting and accounting requirements of all PMA offices.

ITS ORGANIZATION

In addition to the Office of the Administrator, which includes the Assistant Administrators for Production, Marketing and CCC Activities, PMA is organized into 9 commodity branches 7 functional branches, 5 staff branches and 50 State and Insular offices.

COMMODITY BRANCHES AND STATE AND INSULAR PMA OFFICES

The nine commodity branches are responsible for all phases of PMA commodity assignments. The State PMA Offices serve as the channel through which the 100,000 elected farmer committeemen may express the voice of the farmers in the planning of production and marketing programs. State and Insular PMA Offices are organized to cooperate with and assist farmers in the conservation of their farm and ranch lands so as to insure production on a continuing basis.

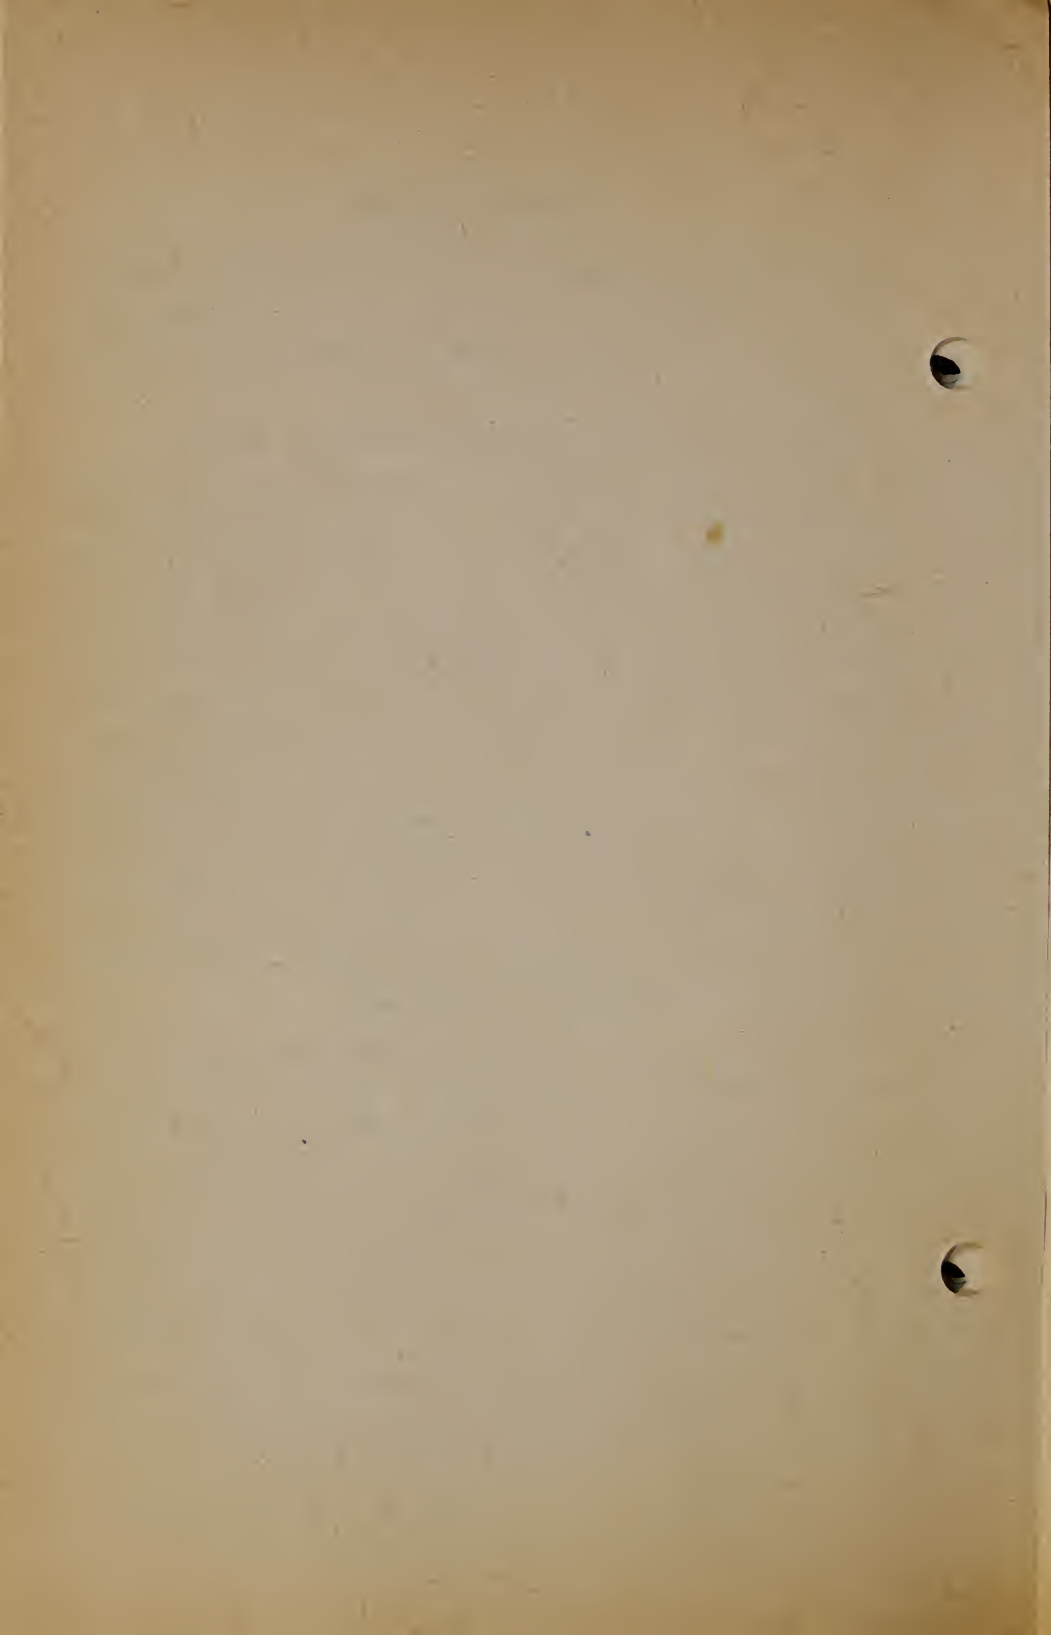

As further safeguards all along the lines of production and marketing, the commodity branches are set up to provide regulatory and inspectional services in accordance with a number of Congressional Acts. The technical and administrative knowledge and skills of the functional and staff branches are employed at the points they are needed in planning and carrying out commodity programs.

Thus, PMA men from the commodity and functional branches and the State PMA representatives may be found in field offices, research laboratories, markets, warehouses, processing plants, and on farms throughout the country, doing a wide variety of highly skilled jobs. In this way current production and marketing factors are blended into our programs all the way from the farm to the consumer. Our organization is designed to bring to bear all of PMA's resources into these programs which are so vital to the public interest.

Programs of all farm commodities of major economic importance -- both crop and livestock -- are included in the assignments of the following commodity branches:

Cotton Branch
Dairy Branch

Fruit and Vegetable Branch
Sugar Branch

Livestock Branch
Poultry Branch
Fats and Oils Branch

Grain Branch
Tobacco Branch

FUNCTIONAL AND STAFF BRANCHES

The Functional and Staff Branches make up the other major segment of PMA. In most instances, the nature of their function is indicated by their name:

Agricultural Conservation Programs Branch	Information Branch
Audit Branch	Labor Branch
Budget and Management Branch	Marketing Facilities Branch
Compliance and Investigations Branch	Marketing Research Branch
Fiscal Branch	Price Support and Foreign Supply Branch
Food Distribution Programs Branch
Shipping and Storage Branch

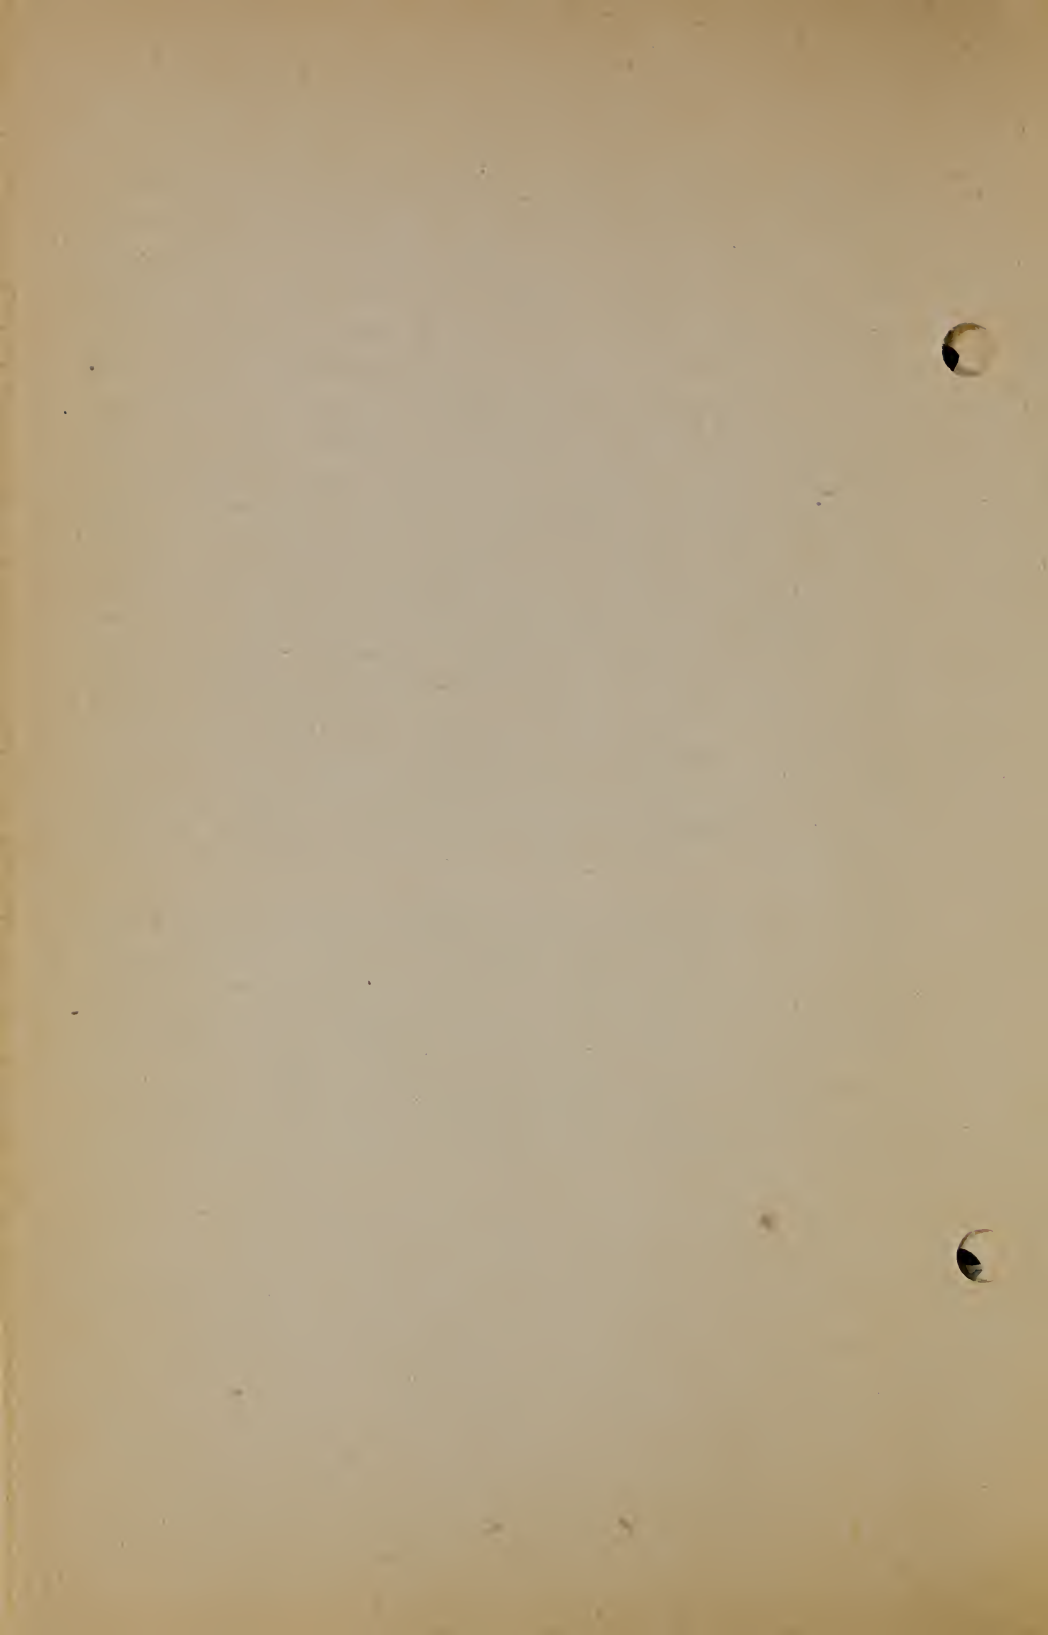

One of the most important aspects of PMA is its relationship to the Commodity Credit Corporation. Although many of the policy making and administrative personnel of PMA and CCC are the same people -- the Administrator of PMA is also the President of CCC -- the organizations are distinct. It is only at the program level that their identities tend to merge and then only in connection with programs financed by CCC funds.

The policy making body of the Commodity Credit Corporation is the CCC Board of Directors. This represents the highest administrative level in the Department of Agriculture. The Board is composed of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Under Secretary and the Assistant Secretary, the Administrator, Deputy Administrator and the three Assistant Administrators of PMA. The Board relies on the Director of the Department's Office of Budget and Finance for top fiscal advice and on the Solicitor of the Department for legal counsel.

The administrative and operational machinery of CCC, however, is a part of PMA. It is centered in the joint office of the Administrator of PMA and the President of CCC. The list of officials of CCC includes the PMA Administrator, who is President; his Deputy and the three Assistant Administrators - one for CCC, one for Production and one for Marketing - who are Vice Presidents; the Controller; the Deputy Assistant Administrator for CCC who serves as Secretary to the Board; and the Director of the PMA Fiscal Branch who serves as Treasurer of the Commodity Credit Corporation. Programs involving CCC financing are handled, like other PMA programs, by PMA offices. Such programs may be conducted by the PMA-CCC field or Washington offices, or by the State and other PMA field offices, as necessary. In this way the operations of the Commodity Credit Corporation are blended into PMA activities in all programs involving CCC funds. In this way, too, the commodity branches and other organizational parts of PMA, in turn, become a part of the Commodity Credit Corporation's operational structure. This interrelationship provides an excellent example of the philosophy back of PMA's organization -- which seeks at all times the most fluid and efficient approach to the job expected of us by the people.

These Branches and CCC round out PMA's endeavor to service the farmer from the time production plans are being made until his products finally reach the consumer's table, whether in this country or abroad. Several of the Branches are concerned exclusively with problems of marketing. They are evidence of our progress toward making PMA the balanced Production and Marketing Administration it is intended to be.
